FBAA

agile. market intelligence

CONSUMER ACCESS TO MORTGAGES 2025

Explore the attitudes, perceptions and priorities of Australian consumers in the sixth edition of this annual research.

FOREWORD BY FBAA

The Australian mortgage market has undergone tremendous transformation in recent years, from pandemic-era uncertainty to rapid interest rate increases and a cost-of-living crisis affecting households across the country. Throughout this change, one truth has remained: consumers need support, choice and guidance more than ever before.

The Consumer Access to Mortgages 2025 report, now in its sixth year, plays an essential role in uncovering how Australians navigate one of life's biggest financial decisions. It provides industry professionals, policymakers and the broader lending ecosystem with timely, evidence-based insights into the needs and perceptions of borrowers.

This year's report reinforces the value of mortgage brokers in delivering confidence, clarity and competition. Brokers continue to be highly trusted, particularly by those seeking more personalised support or navigating complex financial arrangements. But the report also signals a need for greater education — around the role brokers play, how they are remunerated, and the protection offered by the Best Interests Duty.

Importantly, the findings highlight that trust must be earned continuously. While brokers remain the preferred channel for many, shifting economic conditions and digital disruption are reshaping how borrowers think about their next home loan. Our industry must stay agile, focused, and committed to meeting these evolving expectations.

This year's nationally representative survey of 1,342 respondents — including current, past, and prospective mortgage-holders — uncovers a changing consumer mindset. It reveals that:

Trust in mortgage brokers remains strong, but perceptions are increasingly shaped by awareness gaps and cost misconceptions.

Broker loyalty has softened, particularly among younger or first-time borrowers, many of whom are drawn to online banking channels for their simplicity and speed.

Mortgage stress affects one in three borrowers, and refinancing intent is rising — creating an opportunity for brokers to reassert their value as strategic advisers.

Knowledge of the Best Interests Duty remains inconsistent, yet when informed, it boosts confidence in brokers for a significant share of the market.

At the FBAA, we are proud to support research that helps us better understand the people we serve — and advocate for policies and practices that empower brokers to do what they do best: deliver great outcomes for Australian borrowers.

I recommend this report to you and encourage you to explore its findings closely. They provide not only insight, but a roadmap for how we can collectively support the future of responsible and accessible mortgage lending in Australia.

Peter White AM
Managing director
Finance Brokers Association of Australasia (FBAA)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

The Consumer Access to Mortgages 2025 report is an annual research initiative produced by Agile Market Intelligence in partnership with the Finance Brokers Association of Australasia (FBAA), the leading national body representing more than 11,000 finance and mortgage professionals.

Now in its sixth year, the report explores the experiences, preferences and perceptions of Australian borrowers as they navigate the mortgage landscape. It provides industry stakeholders with valuable insight into the role of third-party mortgage brokers compared to proprietary lending channels, and how consumer needs are evolving in response to changing market conditions.

Originally launched in 2019, this series was created to track borrower sentiment and behaviour, and to better understand the impact of key regulatory and economic developments, including broker remuneration models and shifting lending standards.

The 2025 edition comes at a time of continued financial pressure for Australian households. While interest rate rises have paused after 12 consecutive hikes, many borrowers are now transitioning off fixed rates and feeling the squeeze of higher monthly repayments. In this environment, access to advice, choice and transparency has never been more critical.

Drawing on a nationally representative survey of 1,342 consumers, this year's findings offer a comprehensive view of consumer behaviour and preferences across different life stages and borrowing situations. It examines satisfaction and trust across mortgage channels, intentions for future lending, and how consumers are responding to rising living costs and economic uncertainty.

This report is designed to help lenders, brokers, policymakers and other industry participants better understand the people they serve — and how to support them through one of the most important financial decisions of their lives.

Michael Johnson
Director
Agile Market Intelligence

KEY FINDINGS

Mortgage brokers continue to be highly trusted by consumers throughout their home loan experience.

MORTGAGE BROKER TRUST:

TRUST (Top-2): 82%

COMPLETE TRUST: 39%

1 in 3 consumers said they are more likely to use a mortgage broker, when they were not before, after learning about the Best Interests Duty.

PREFERENCE GAIN AFTER BID AWARENESS: 28%

4 in 10 future first-time borrowers are likely to choose a mortgage broker to assist them with their mortgage.

43% of future first-time borrowers plan to turn to a mortgage broker for support.

4 in 10 Australians said their financial situation has worsened over the last 12 months, including 1 in 10 who believe it is “significantly worse”.

42% of consumers have seen their financial situation worsen.

Approximately 1 in 3 Australian mortgage-holders may be experiencing mortgage stress.

34% of mortgage-holders have mortgage repayments greater than 30% of their household income.

METHODOLOGY

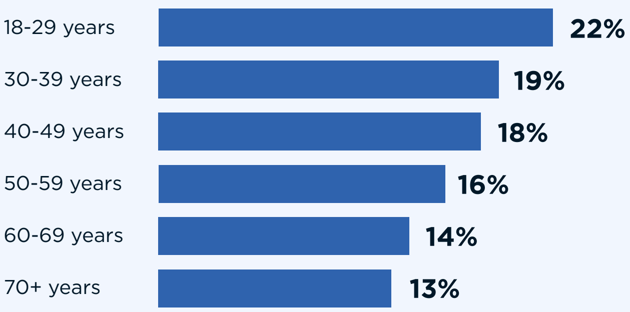
The Consumer Access to Mortgages 2025 survey was conducted between 25th March and 17th April 2025.

The survey encouraged a nationally representative sample of Australian consumers to complete the questionnaire from Agile Market Intelligence's consumer panel.

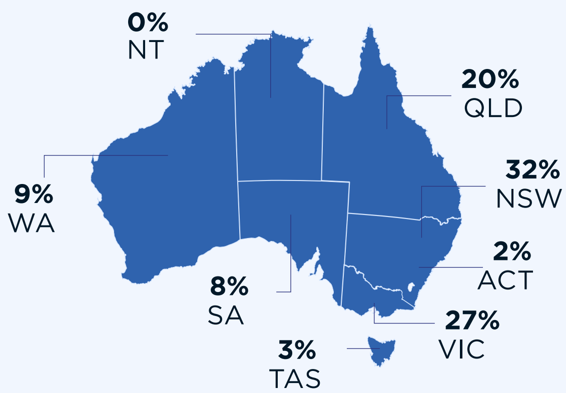
The survey received a usable sample of 1,342 responses, including 571 current mortgage-holders, 240 previous mortgage holders and 531 non-mortgage holders.

The survey sample has been weighted to Australian Bureau of Statistics' 2021 Census data on gender, age, household income and dwelling characteristics.

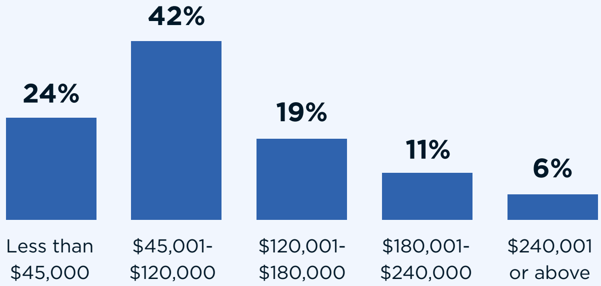
Age brackets



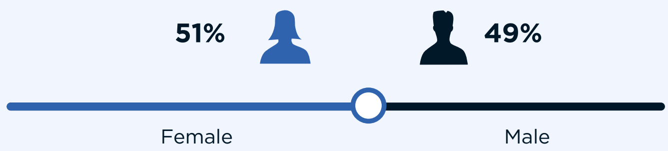
Residence location



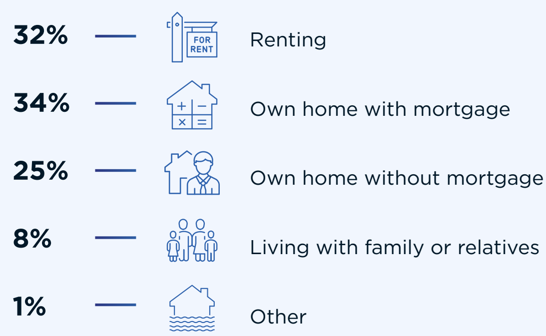
Household annual income



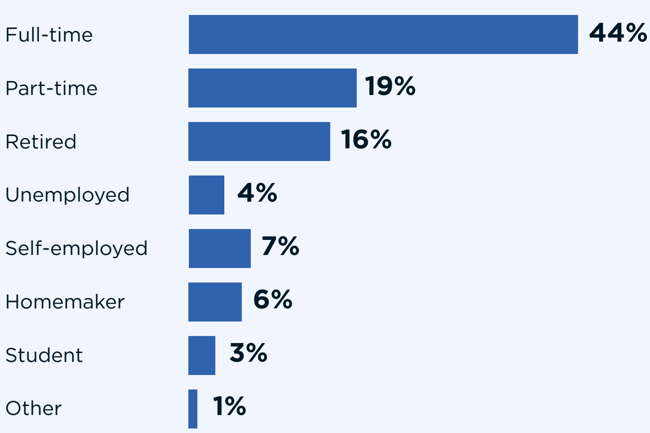
Gender



Current living situation



Employment status



Due to rounding, some figures may not exactly equal 100%. All figures have been rounded to their nearest decimal for the purpose of this report.

SECTION 1

MORTGAGE LENDING EXPERIENCE

This section explores key relationship measures of borrowers, including satisfaction and trust, across third-party and proprietary distribution channels.

Mortgage activity

1 in 10 consumers are looking to secure their first mortgage for a home or investment property in the next 2 years.

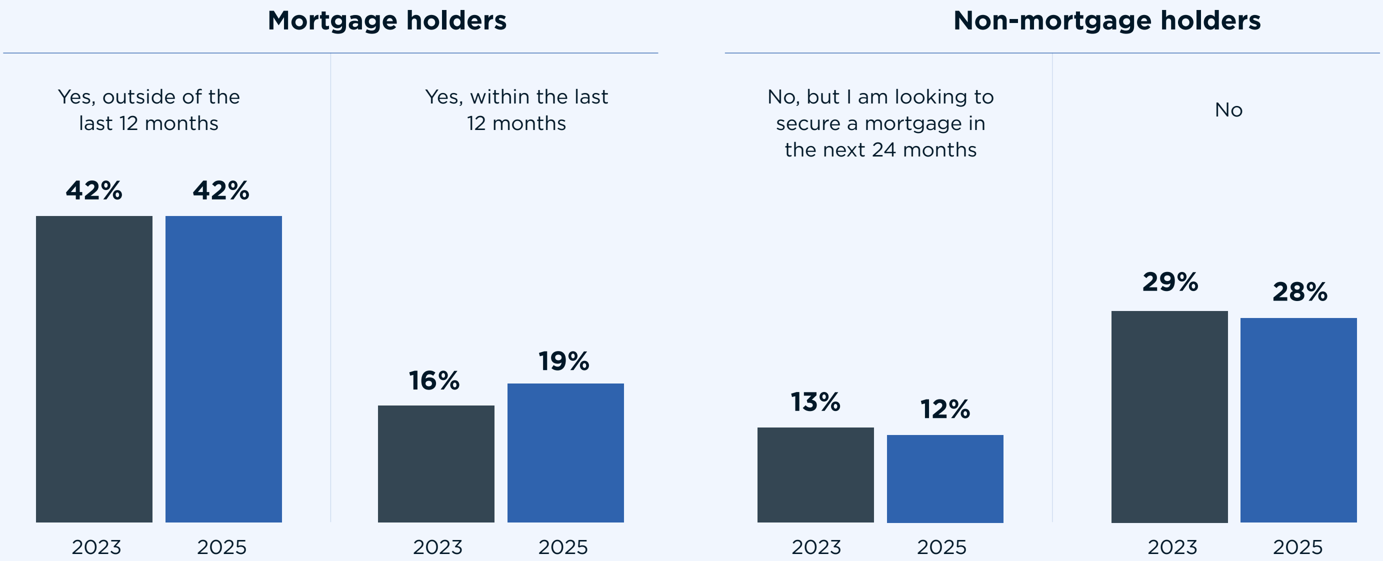
In understanding the participants of the Consumer Access to Mortgages 2025 report, we first determined whether they had secured a mortgage for a home or investment property.

Among this sample, 19% of consumers secured or refinanced their most recent mortgage in the last 12 months, a marginal increase of 3% on the last observed value, aligning with the growth in mortgages throughout the period.

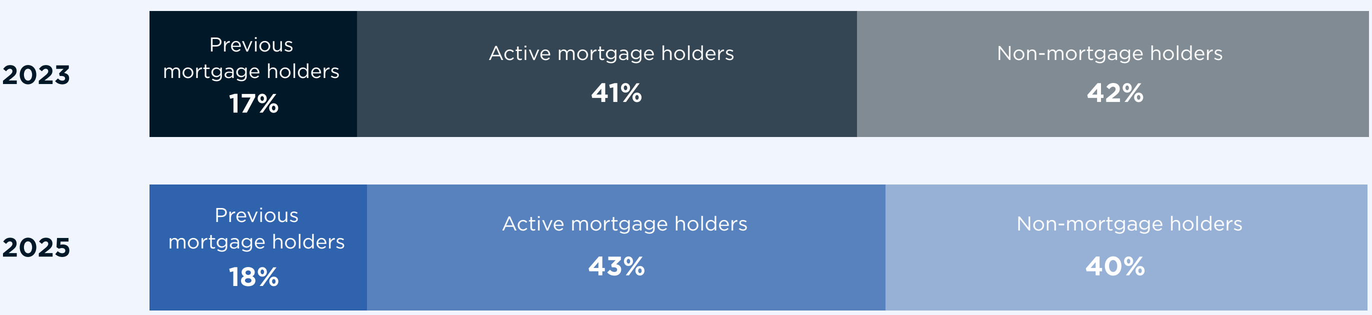
We found that the level of future demand for mortgages will remain stable with 12% of consumers planning to take out their first mortgage over the next two years.

Meanwhile, almost 1 in 3 consumers have no intentions of securing a mortgage, either due to their financial situation, investment intentions or lifestyle decisions.

Have you ever taken out a mortgage for a home or investment property?



Distribution of mortgage holder status



Future borrowing and lead indicators

Strong demand outlook with 1 in 5 Australians are actively looking to invest in property over the next 12 months.

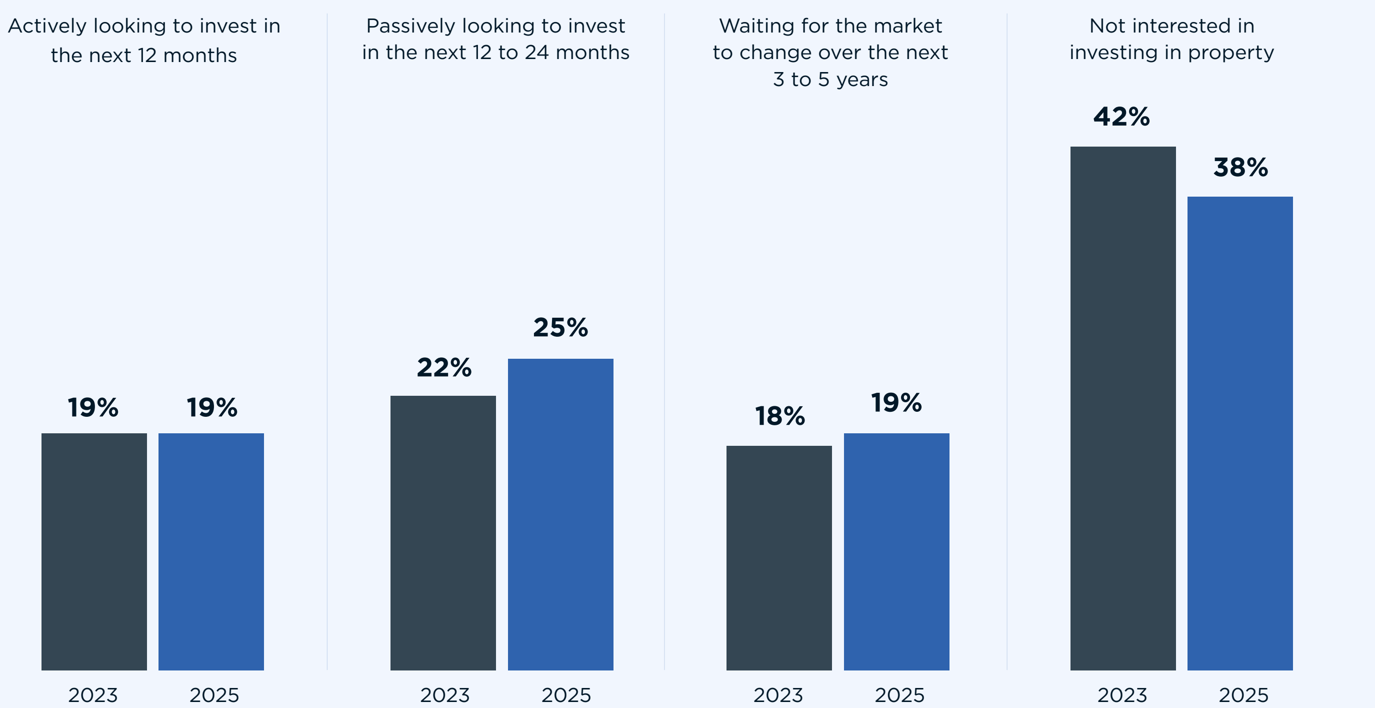
Despite the challenging economic circumstances that have faced Australian consumers in 2025, there is a generally positive outlook for property investment for the future.

Almost one in five (19%) Australians are actively looking to invest in today's property market, while another one in four (25%) are passively exploring their options over the next one to two years.

These figures, along with 2025's mortgage activity for property investors, indicate an underlying confidence and sustained interest in property as a long-term asset, suggesting that investment activity may rebound once economic uncertainty eases.

Mortgage brokers are uniquely positioned to help borrowers capitalise on these property investment opportunities by strategising and hand-holding when assisting borrowers' financial decisions.

How would you describe your attitude toward investing in property in today's market?



Mortgage distribution channel

2 in 3 Australian borrowers chose to apply directly through a mortgage broker over the last 12 months.

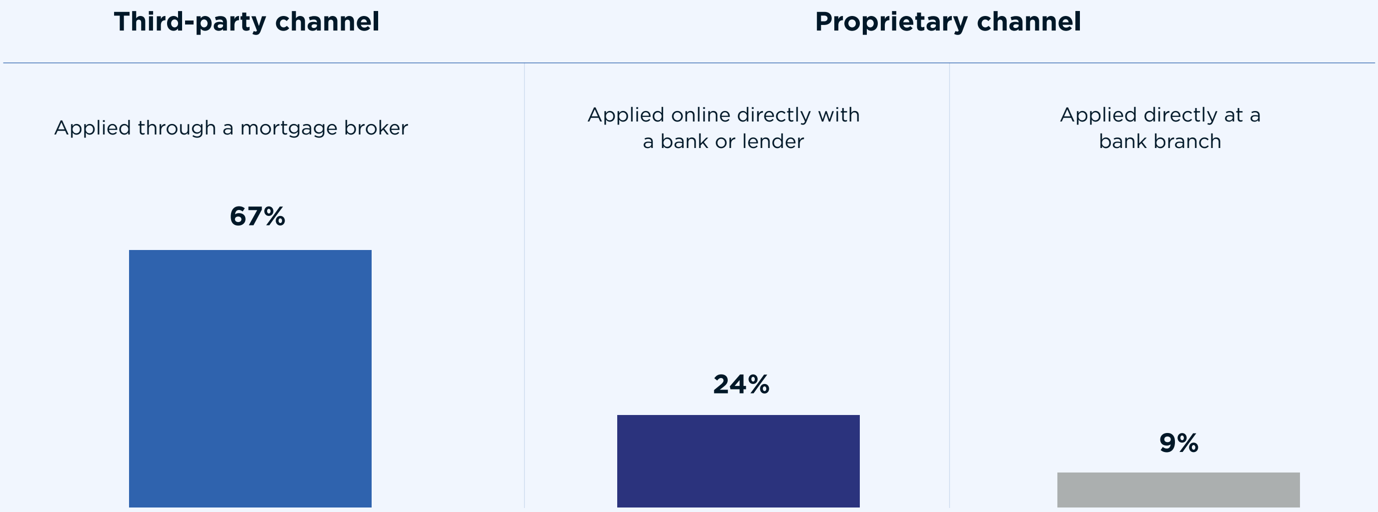
The majority of borrowers (67%) who took out a mortgage in the last 12 months reported that they applied for a mortgage through a mortgage broker.

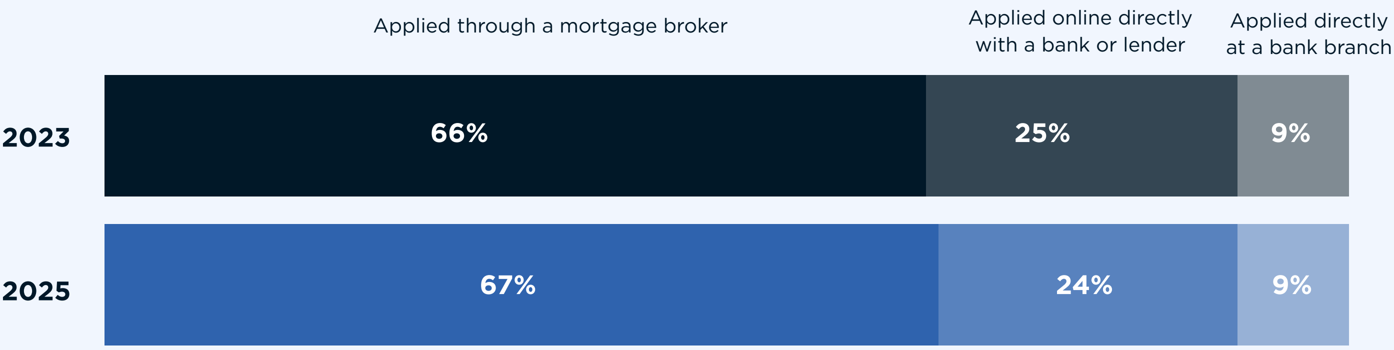
The remaining one-third worked with the proprietary distribution channel of lenders. The majority of these participants applied online directly with their lender. Borrowers who secured a mortgage by applying directly at a bank branch, remain a minority at 9%.

This year saw an increase of property investors choosing to apply online directly, compared to previous survey periods. Owner-occupiers that applied directly at a bank branch have also increased this time.

First home buyers and refinancers were found to be more likely to choose mortgage brokers, indicating a preference for personalised advice and access to a broader range of loan products, rather than navigating options without guidance.

The last time you took out a mortgage, which approach did you use?





Home loan experience

While consumer satisfaction with brokers remains high, it has fallen to be almost on par with proprietary channels for mortgages secured in the last 12 months.

Satisfaction is a key relationship measure that not only provides an indication of the quality of the collaboration and experience between the borrower and the lender or broker, but is also a key indicator of each channel's ability to retain existing customers and generate repeat business.

In this year's study, borrowers were asked to rate their overall home loan experience to uncover which distribution channels have the highest level of customer satisfaction.

The Consumer Access to Mortgages 2025 report uncovered that customer satisfaction across both broker and proprietary channels for borrowers who secured their mortgage in the last 12 months was similar.

Top-2 satisfaction (extremely or very satisfied) for the mortgage broking channel equalled 79%, consistent with the proprietary channel's 76% satisfaction.

However, the mortgage broking channel saw a higher rate of "Extremely satisfied" clients with 25% compared to 15% for the proprietary channel.

BROKER SATISFACTION:

LAST 12 MONTHS: 79%
ALL-TIME: 87%

PROPRIETARY CHANNEL SATISFACTION:

LAST 12 MONTHS: 76%
ALL-TIME: 76%

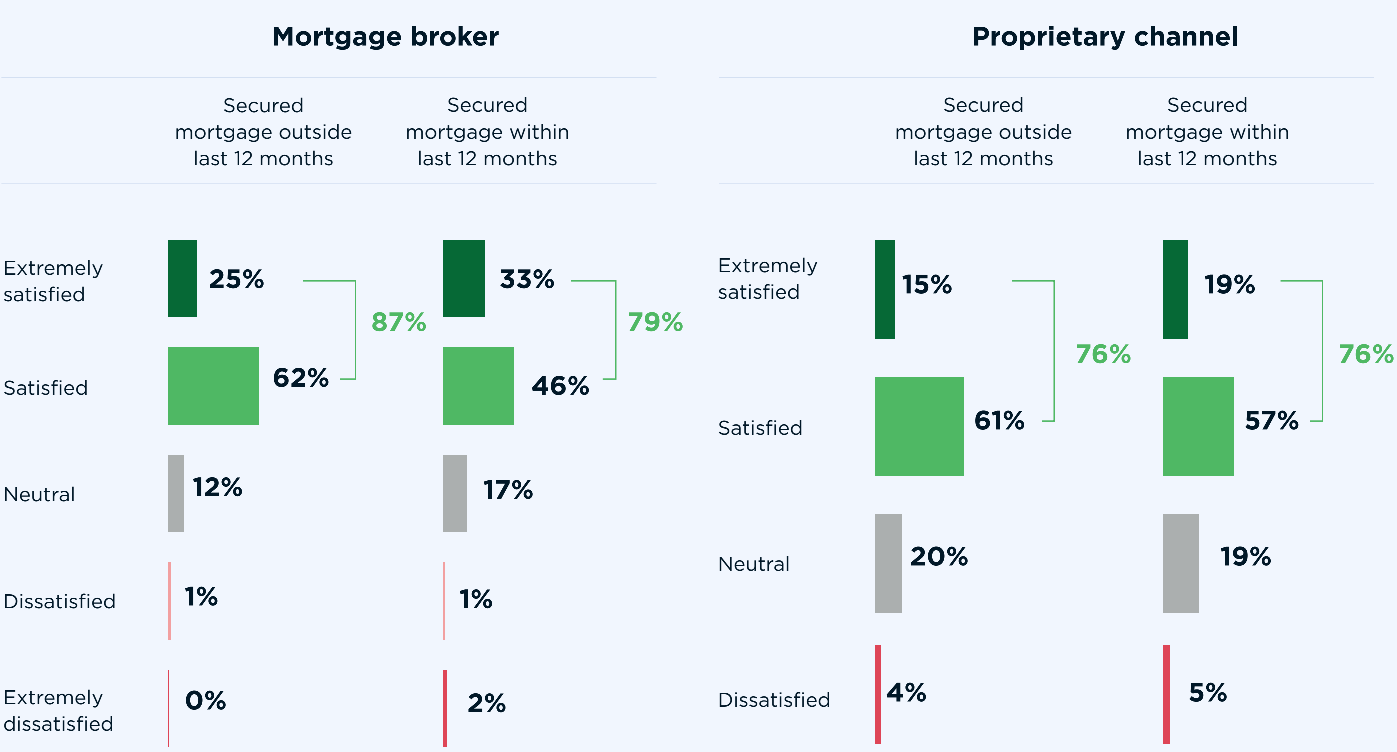
How satisfied were you with your overall home loan experience?



Trusted relationships

Mortgage brokers maintain a strong trust advantage over lender personnel.

Trust is a critical long-term relationship metric, built gradually through repeated, high-quality interactions between the consumer and the broker.

It reflects the consumer's confidence that their broker or lender communicates transparently and consistently delivers on expectations. For mortgage brokers, this is especially important, as they are obligated to act in their clients' best interests.

Mortgage brokers tend to excel in this area due to the deep, enduring relationships they establish with clients over many years.

According to the Consumer Access to Mortgages 2025 report, 82% of clients express trust in their mortgage broker, including 39% who say they "completely trust" them.

By comparison, trust levels are notably lower among consumers who interacted with lender representatives.

MORTGAGE BROKER TRUST:

TRUST (Top-2): 82%
COMPLETE TRUST: 39%

PROPRIETARY CHANNEL TRUST:

TRUST (Top-2): 67%
COMPLETE TRUST: 20%

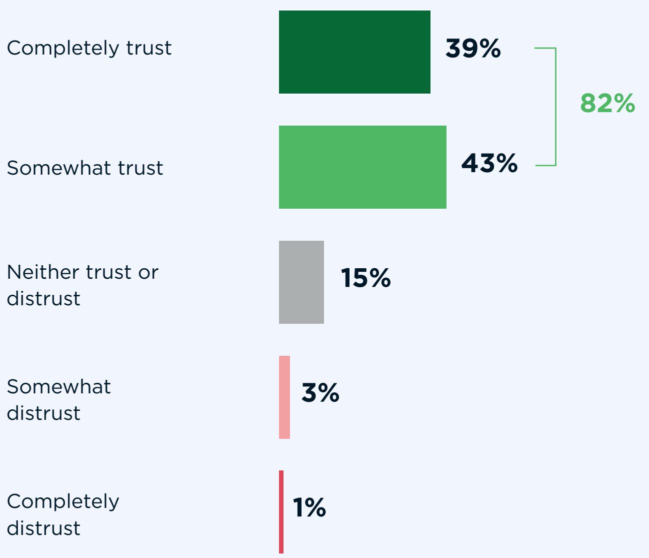
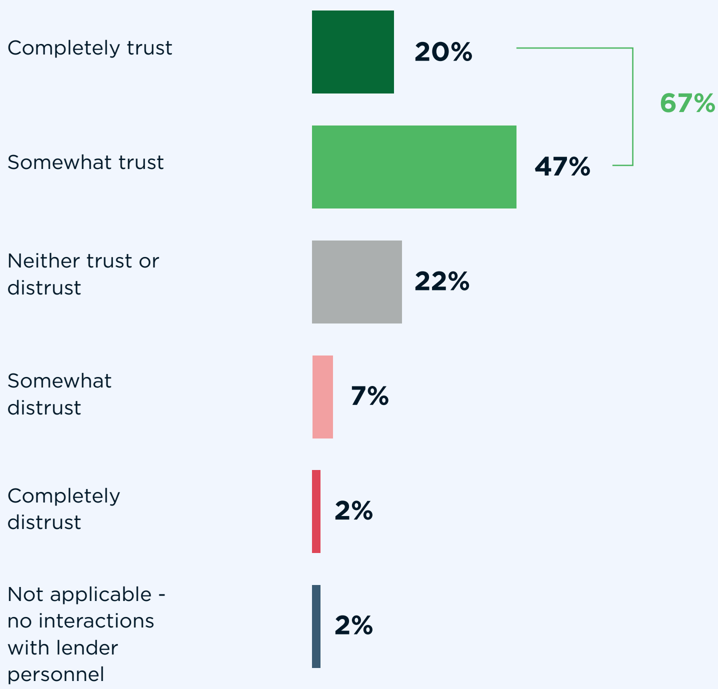
How much did you trust your mortgage broker?

Mortgage broker



How much did you trust the representative of the lender that you had interactions with?

Proprietary channel



Mortgage application stress

57% of borrowers felt applying for their recent mortgage was 'somewhat' and 'moderately' stressful.

Purchasing real estate and applying for a mortgage can be the biggest financial decision for most consumers.

In this year's findings, 57% of new mortgage holders described the process as "stressful," while another 31% said it was "somewhat stressful." Only a small portion, just 12%, felt it was not particularly stressful. Stress levels were slightly higher among consumers using the proprietary (direct-to-lender) channel compared to those who worked with a broker.

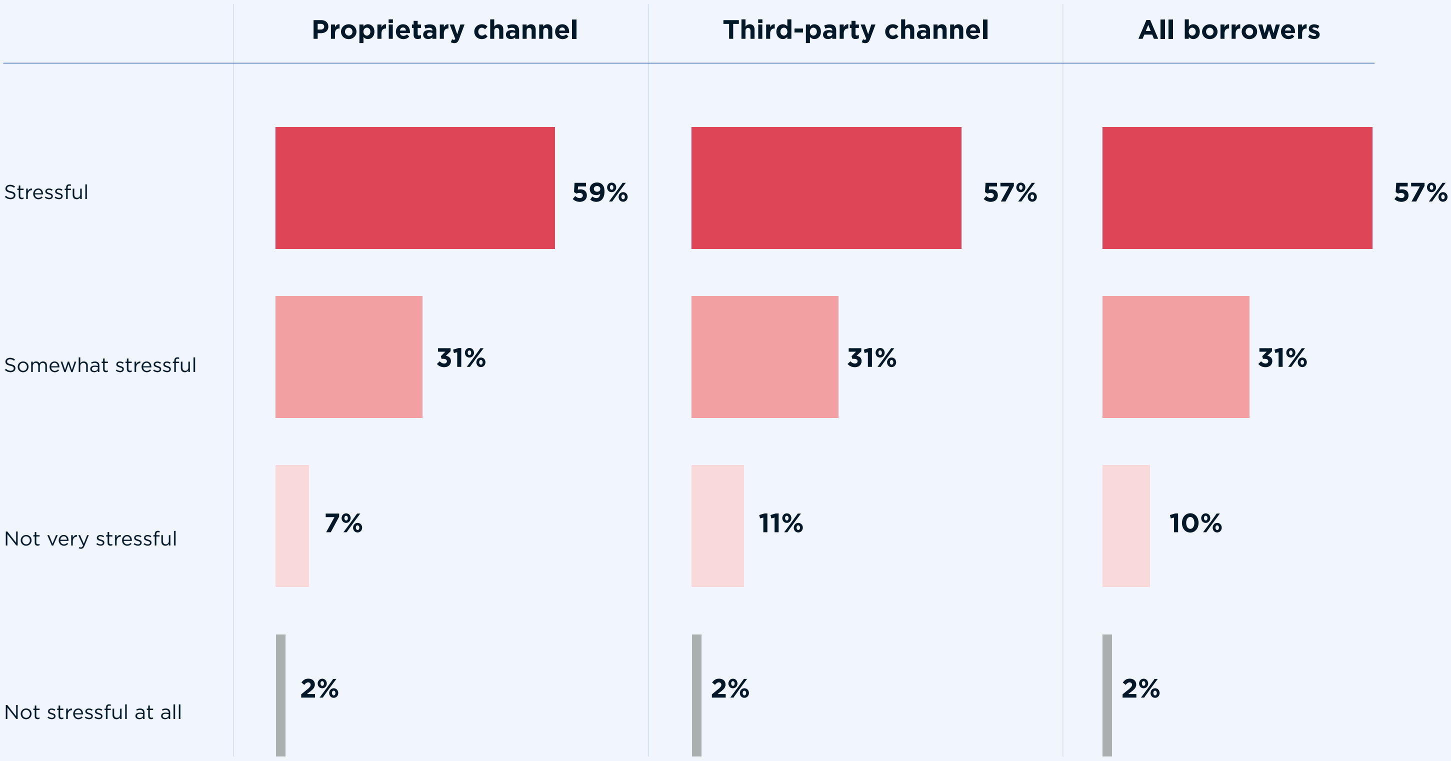
When comparing the experience between channels, borrowers who worked directly with a lender (proprietary channel) were slightly more likely to find the process stressful.

59% percent of proprietary channel consumers described the experience as stressful, compared to 57% of those who used a mortgage broker (third-party channel).

Specifically, 13% of broker clients found the experience "not very stressful" or "not stressful at all," compared to just 9% of lender customers.

This suggests that brokers may provide a more supportive and streamlined experience, helping clients navigate the process with slightly less strain than those who deal directly with a lender.

Thinking about the process of securing your most recent mortgage, how stressful was the experience?



SECTION 2

PERCEPTIONS ABOUT MORTGAGE BROKERS

This year's report explores Australian public perceptions of mortgage brokers, including awareness of BID and the impact it may have on driving the role that mortgage and finance brokers can play as a trusted adviser to help Australian borrowers.

Broker familiarity

40% of consumers have limited understanding of mortgage broker services.

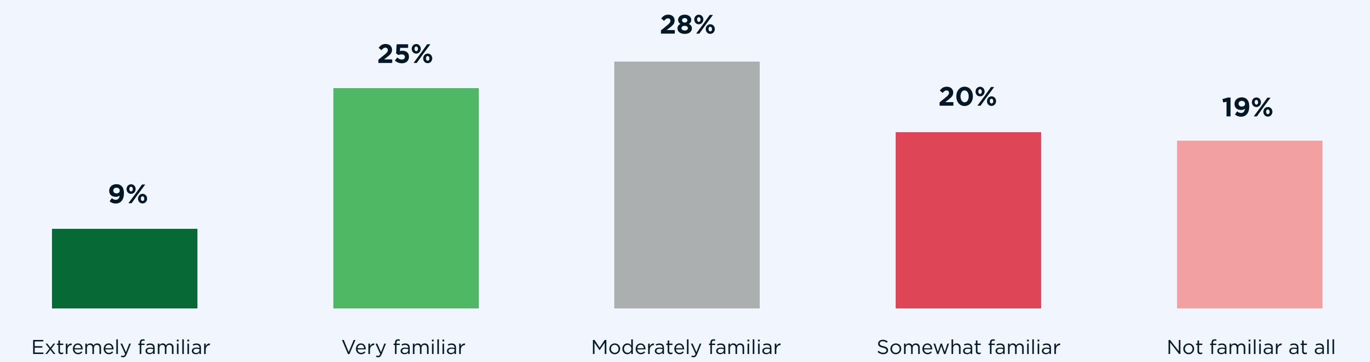
While the broker market share has reached record highs in recent years, there is still a significant portion of the population that lacks familiarity with the services brokers offer.

The Consumer Access to Mortgages 2025 report found that only 34% of consumers consider themselves either “very familiar” (25%) or “extremely familiar” (9%) with mortgage broker services. In contrast, 20% say they are only “somewhat familiar,” and another 19% report being “not familiar at all.” This means nearly 2 in 5 consumers (39%) have limited awareness of what brokers do.

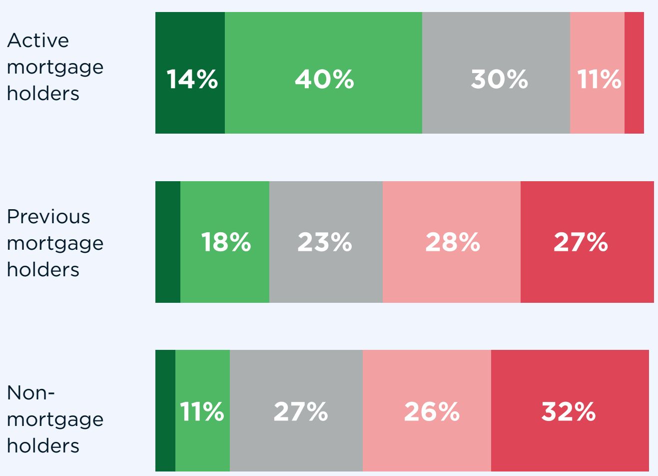
Familiarity is strongest among active mortgage holders, who are more likely to report a higher level of understanding. However, awareness is much lower among previous and non-mortgage holders, highlighting a gap in broader consumer knowledge.

As broker adoption grows, closing this awareness gap will be crucial. Clearer communication about broker services can help more consumers make confident, well-informed decisions about their mortgage options.

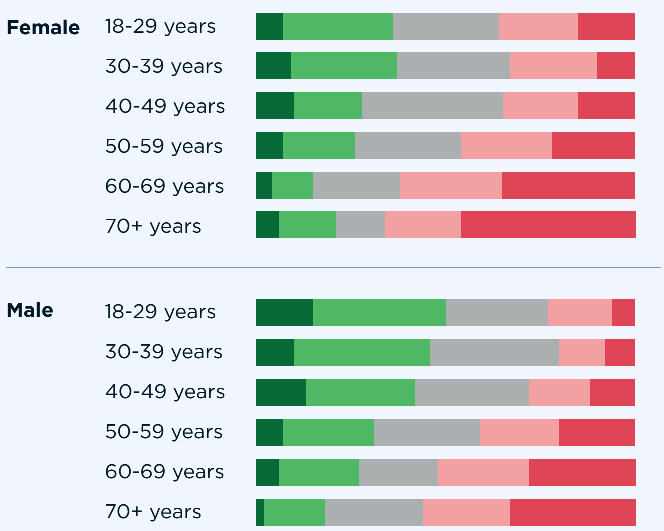
How familiar are you with the services that mortgage brokers offer?



Distribution of familiarity by mortgage holders status



Distribution of familiarity by age/gender



Broker engagement (direct borrowers)

6 out of 10 direct borrowers have not spoken to a mortgage broker.

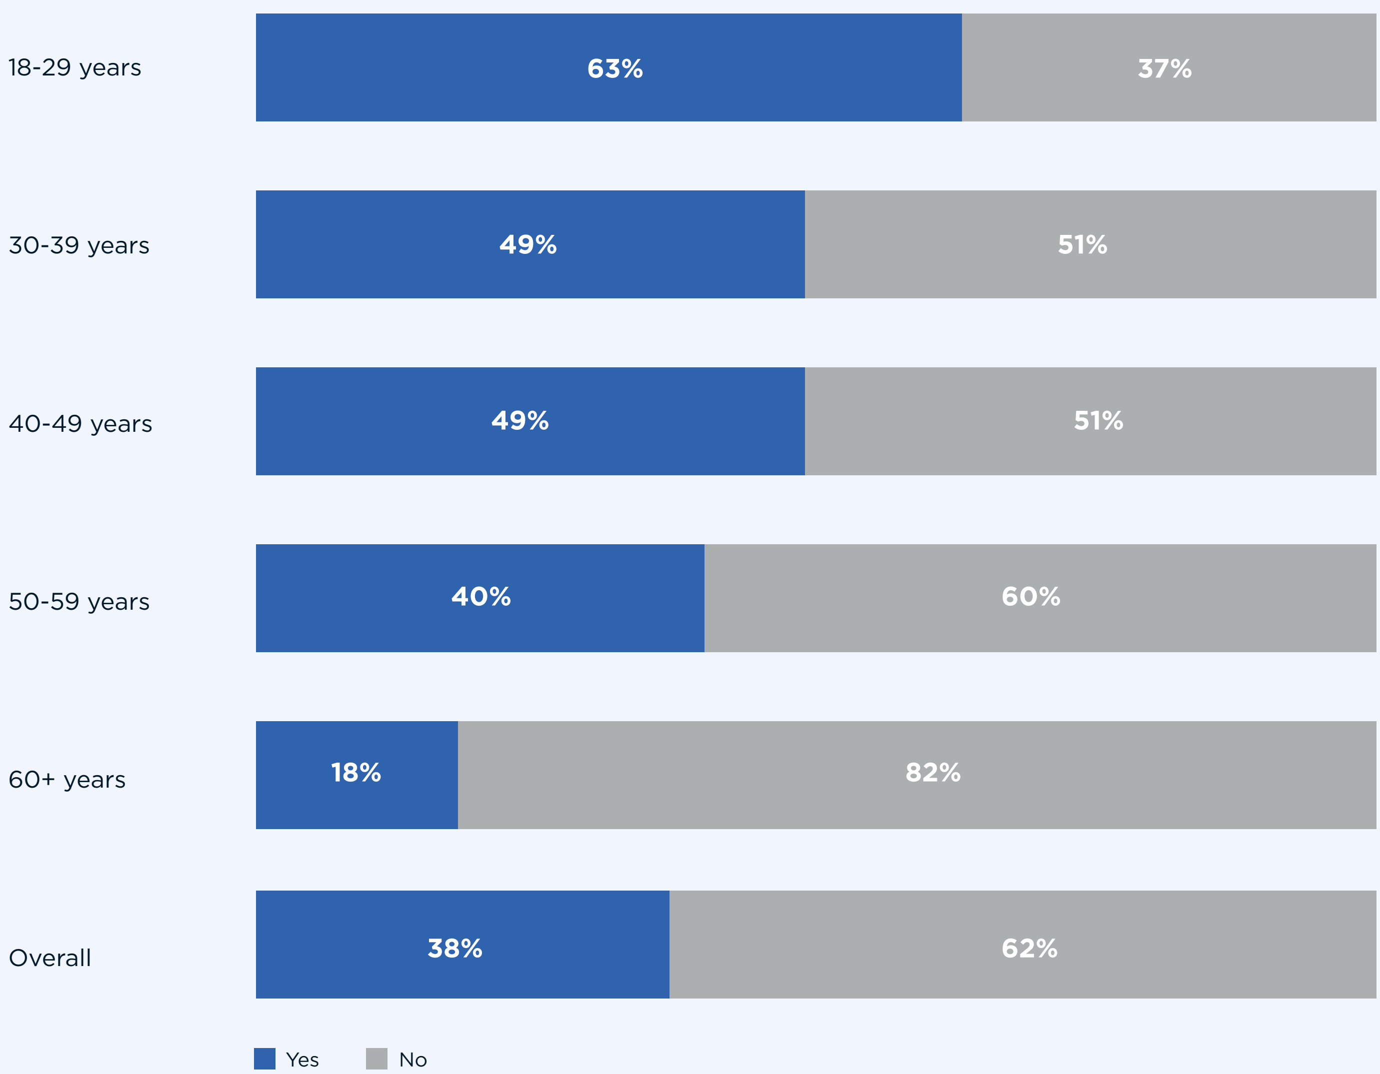
This report explored whether direct borrowers – those who have applied directly with the bank – have spoken to mortgage brokers about their needs.

Among this group, 62% have never spoken to a broker, leaving only 38% having done so.

The findings suggest that a significant portion of direct borrowers have made decisions without considering the guidance or comparison services brokers offer. It highlights a potential gap in either awareness of or engagement with the broker channel.

Have you ever spoken to a mortgage broker to discuss your needs?

Those who have a mortage and applied via proprietary channel for most recent mortgage.



Broker perception

Broker perception leaves room for growth, with largely neutral sentiments from consumers.

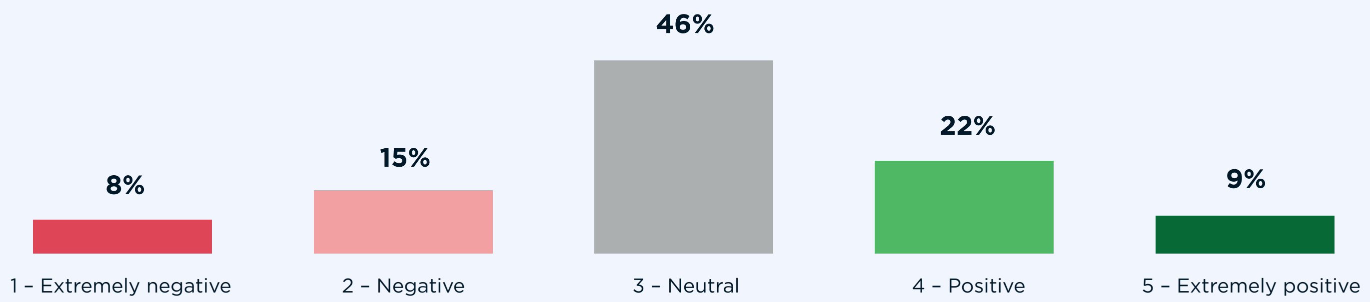
The Consumer Access to Mortgages 2025 report asked respondents to rate their perception of mortgage brokers on a five-point scale. Nearly half (46%) selected the midpoint score of 3, indicating a neutral sentiment. Positive perceptions were less common, with only 22% rating brokers a 4 and just 9% choosing "extremely positive".

While only a small share of consumers held extremely negative views (8%), the overall picture suggests that brokers are more often met with neutrality or uncertainty than strong sentiment.

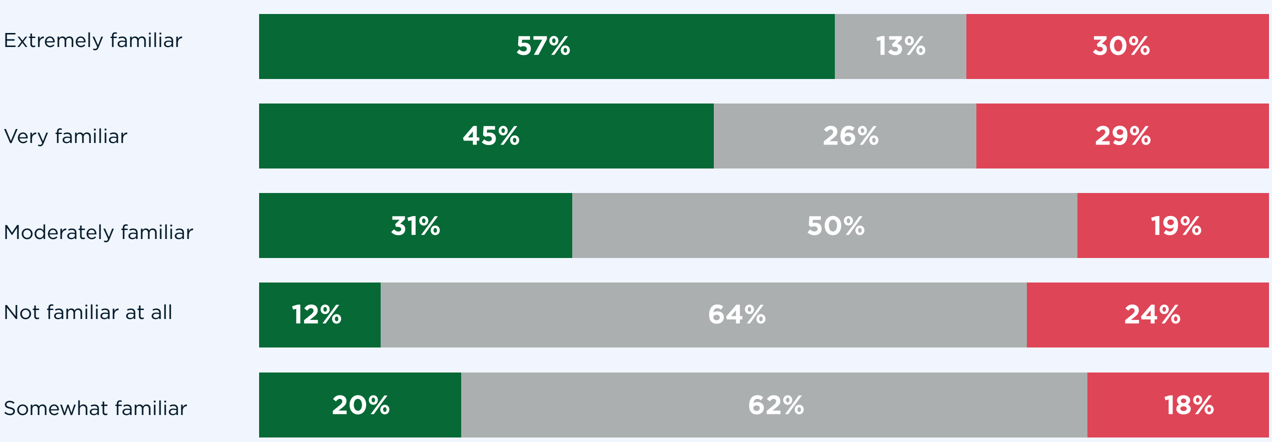
Perception is closely tied to familiarity. Those who are extremely or very familiar with broker services were significantly more likely to view them positively. Among those extremely familiar, 57% held a positive perception, compared to only 12% of those who were not familiar at all.

As the broker market grows, lifting perception through stronger consumer education, clarity of service, and trust-building engagement will be key to shifting sentiment from neutral to positive.

What are your perception towards mortgage brokers?



Distribution of perception by familarity with mortgage brokers



Broker statements

Consumer confidence in brokers high, though uncertain about costs and fees.

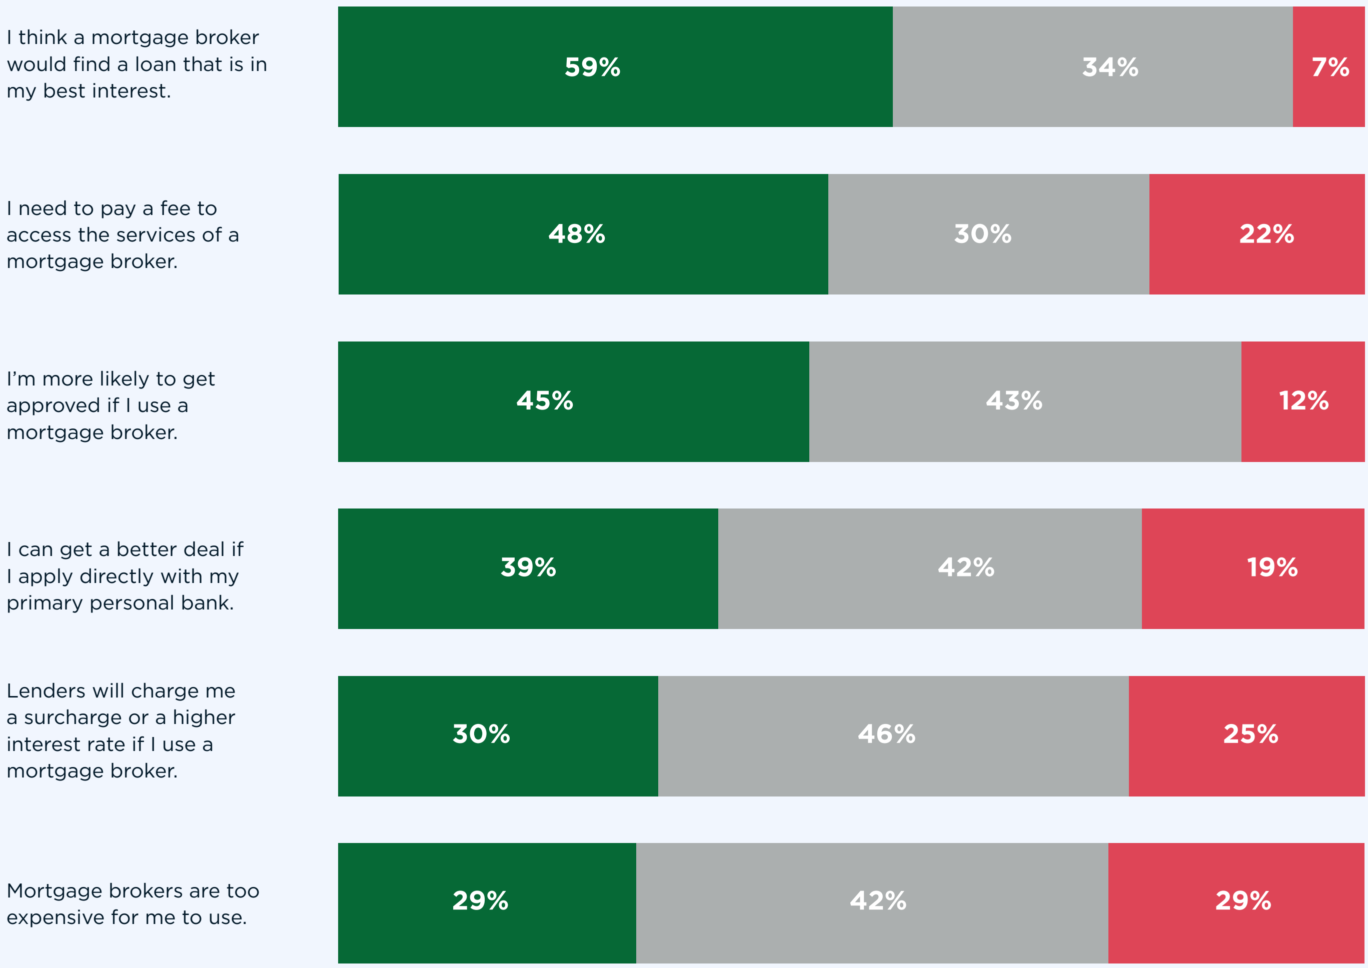
Several statements were presented to survey respondents to learn consumers' familiarity and perceptions of mortgage broker services. Consumers indicated whether they agreed or disagreed with statements related to their expectations when engaged or planning to engage with brokers.

The majority of consumers agreed with the idea that mortgage brokers would find loans in their best interest (59%), and that they would be more likely to get approved (45%).

Consumers who agreed with statements saying they needed to pay a fee to access broker services (48%) or that lenders would charge them a higher fee if they used the broker channel (30%) were slightly more than those who disagreed.

There was also a lack of consensus on whether the cost of mortgage broker services are too expensive. The study underscores consumers' uncertainty around how brokers are paid for their services.

To what extent do you agree or disagree with each of the following statements:



1 in 3 respondents increase their likelihood of using a mortgage broker, being made aware of brokers' Best Interests Duty.

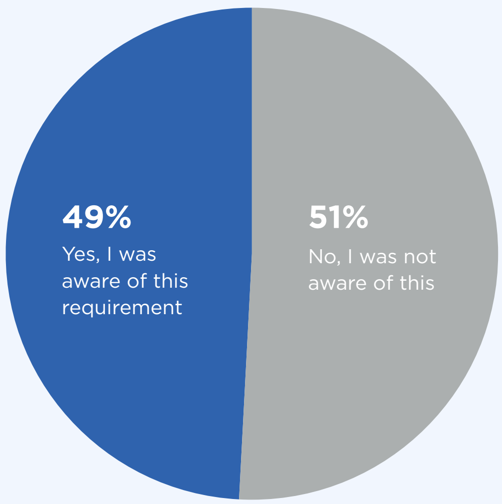
The Best Interests Duty (BID) legally requires mortgage brokers in Australia to act in the best interests of their client.

Consumer awareness of BID was split, with 51% reporting they were previously aware of BID before taking the survey.

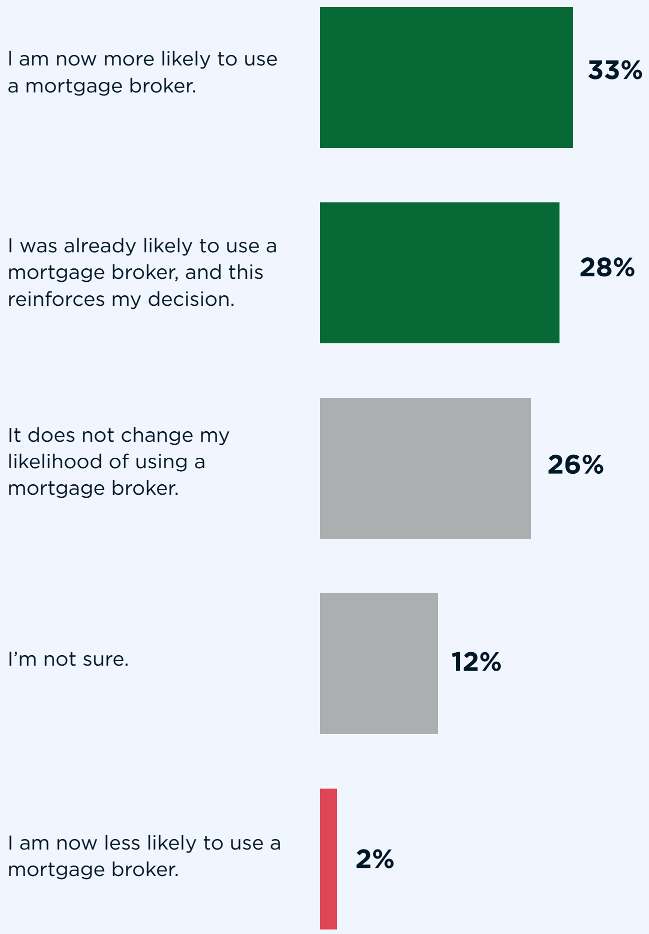
However, after learning about BID, a third of the respondents (33%) answered they were likely to use a mortgage broker.

An additional 28% reported that although they were already likely to use a mortgage broker, the BID reinforces their decision - suggesting BID may strengthen consumer confidence.

Before taking this survey, were you aware that mortgage brokers in Australia are legally required to act in the best interests of their clients (known as the Best Interests Duty?)



Now that you are aware of a mortgage broker's legislated Best Interests Duty, how does this impact your likelihood of using a mortgage broker in the future?



SECTION 3

CHANNEL PREFERENCE

This section explores the preferences and priorities of consumers when thinking about their next mortgage lending decision.

Loyalty & attraction

70% of mortgage broker clients will return to a broker for assistance with their next mortgage application.

Clients who feel a sense of connection and trust with their brokers and lenders will be most likely to return to the channel.

This year's survey results have measured high, but weakened, loyalty rates in the broker channel with 70% of clients planning to use a broker again in their next home loan application.

Meanwhile, the borrowers who used a proprietary channel, either applying directly at a branch or online, also showed high levels of channel loyalty at 78%.

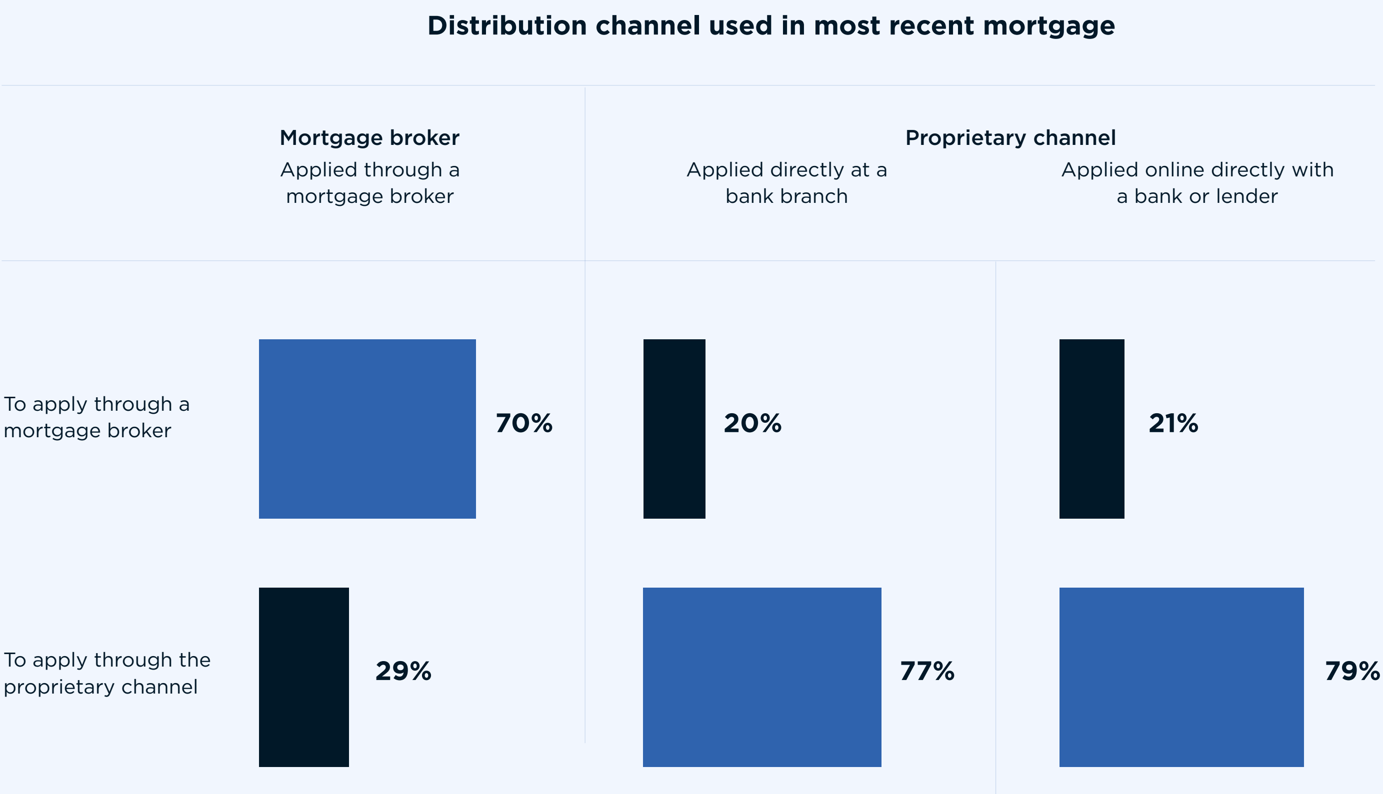
1 in 5 borrowers who applied directly through a lender online are still open to switching to a mortgage broker (21%) for their next mortgage, similar to those who applied directly at a bank branch (20%).

MORTGAGE BROKER LOYALTY: 70%

PROPRIETARY CHANNEL LOYALTY: 78%

*Weighted average of proprietary channel borrowers

If you were to take out another mortgage in the future, which approach would you follow?



Future channel decisions of repeat borrowers

Borrowers are most likely to follow familiar paths for their next mortgage, with digital channels increasing in popularity.

When considering how to approach their next home loan, most borrowers continue to favour the same channel they used previously. The data shows a strong correlation between the most recent distribution channel and future preference, suggesting that experience and familiarity drive confidence.

In 2025, 34% of borrowers say they would speak directly with a mortgage broker, down from 41% in 2023. Meanwhile, 29% say they would go directly to their primary bank at a branch, up slightly from 26%.

Most borrowers who previously used a mortgage broker prefer to consult their broker directly, rather than researching online first. This highlights the trusted advisory role brokers play, helping clients save time, avoid complexity and make smarter loan decisions.

Borrowers who dealt with banks, either online or in person, are more likely to continue using that method, indicating a preference for ease and familiarity rather than actively searching for the best rate.

If you were to take out another mortgage in the future, which approach would you follow?

Distribution channel used in most recent mortgage

2023 / 2025	Mortgage broker: Applied through a mortgage broker	Proprietary channel: Applied directly at a bank branch	Proprietary channel: Applied online directly with a bank or lender	Overall
Speak directly with a mortgage broker	68% / 58%	15% / 9%	21% / 11%	41% / 34%
Apply directly with your personal primary bank at a branch	8% / 18%	48% / 43%	32% / 36%	26% / 29%
Apply directly with your personal primary bank online	3% / 7%	9% / 11%	20% / 28%	9% / 13%
Research options online and then apply via a mortgage broker	14% / 12%	6% / 11%	5% / 9%	9% / 11%
Research options online and then apply at a bank branch	2% / 3%	18% / 17%	10% / 7%	9% / 8%
Research options online and apply to a lender online	3% / 2%	4% / 6%	13% / 7%	6% / 4%
Other	2%	3%	1%	2%

Future channel decisions of first-time borrowers

4 in 10 future first-time borrowers are likely to choose a mortgage broker to assist them with their mortgage.

New entrants to the mortgage market continue to show interest in using brokers, but their preference is slightly lower than that of repeat borrowers.

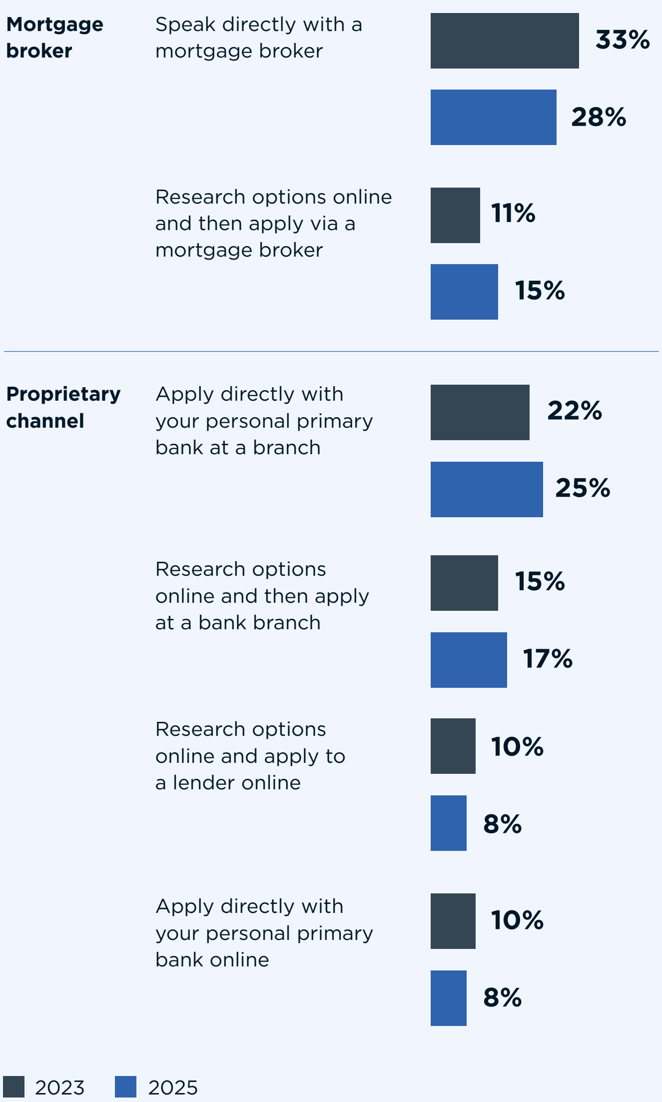
In 2025, 43% of future first-time buyers are likely to use the broker channel, with 28% saying they would speak directly with a broker to begin their mortgage journey education of the options available.

In contrast, one in four (25%) future first-time buyers intend to apply directly at a bank branch, showing that relationships with personal banks remain influential.

Preferences also vary significantly by age and income. Younger borrowers (particularly aged 18–29) show increasing broker preference in 2025 compared to 2023.

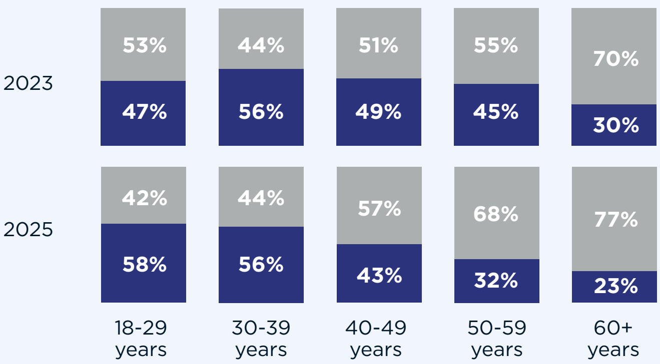
Similarly, higher income earners are more inclined to choose the broker channel, with 60% of those earning over $180,000 indicating this preference.

If you were to take a mortgage, which approach would you follow?

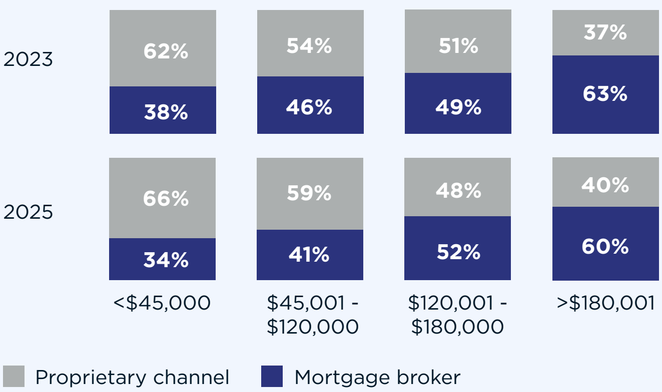


First-time mortgage channel preference

First-time mortgage channel preference by age band



First-time mortgage channel preference by household income



Rationale behind channel choice

41% of borrowers will choose to use the proprietary channel to receive a better interest rate on their next mortgage.

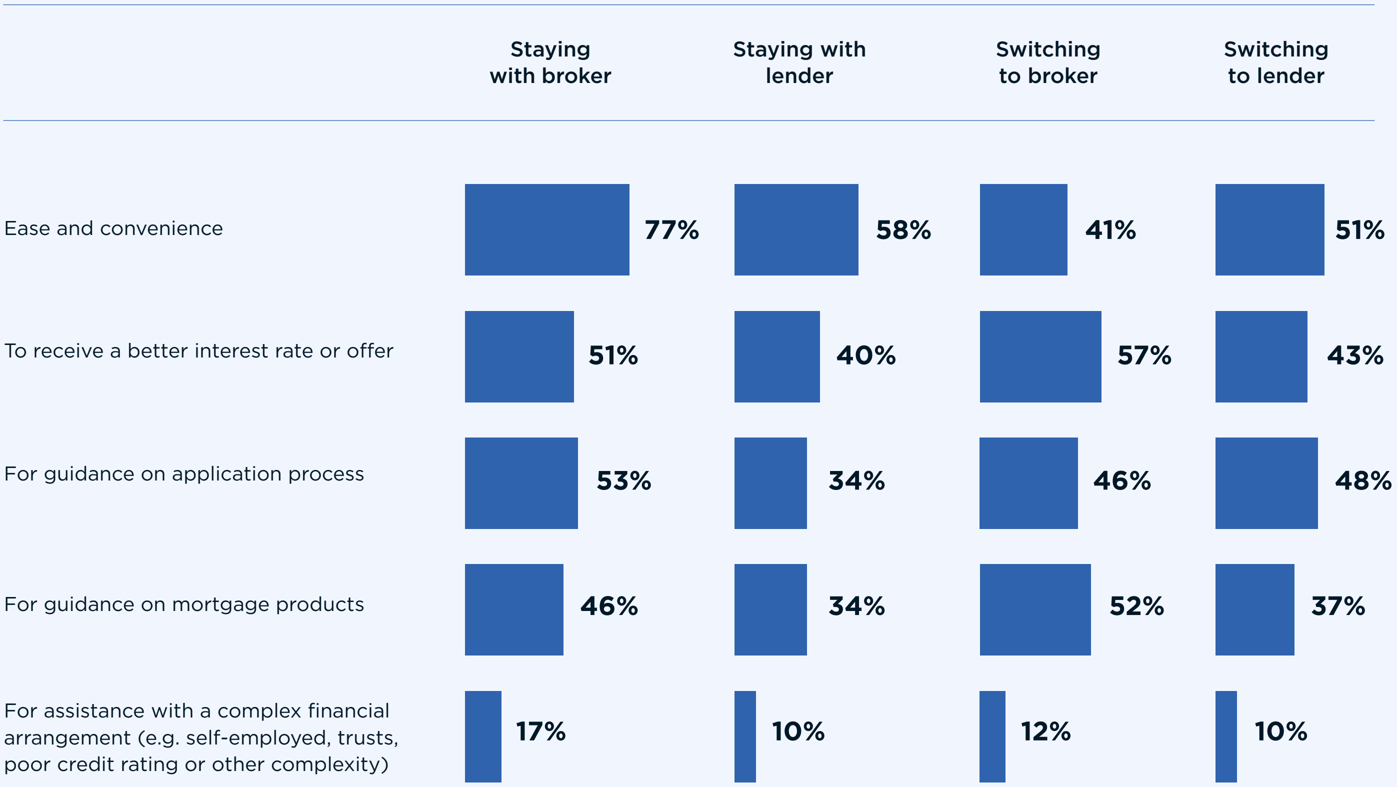
When deciding how to approach their next mortgage, most borrowers say their primary motivation is ease and convenience. This holds true across both proprietary and broker channels, with 77% of borrowers staying with a broker and 58% staying with a lender citing it as their top reason.

A secondary driver for many is the perception of getting a better interest rate or offer. Notably, 57% of borrowers switching to a broker believe this, compared to 43% of those switching to a lender. However, 40% of those staying with or returning to a lender still expect to get the best deal by sticking with their current provider.

Despite the broker channel's broad lender access, some borrowers continue to associate better rates with their primary bank, suggesting that rate perception remains a key barrier for brokers to address.

However, for borrowers seeking guidance on mortgage products and throughout the application process or for assistance with a complex financial arrangement, a greater proportion of borrowers said they would choose a mortgage broker.

Why would you choose this approach?



SECTION 4

IMPACT OF COST OF LIVING

This section explores the challenges consumers are facing with the uncertain economic environment.

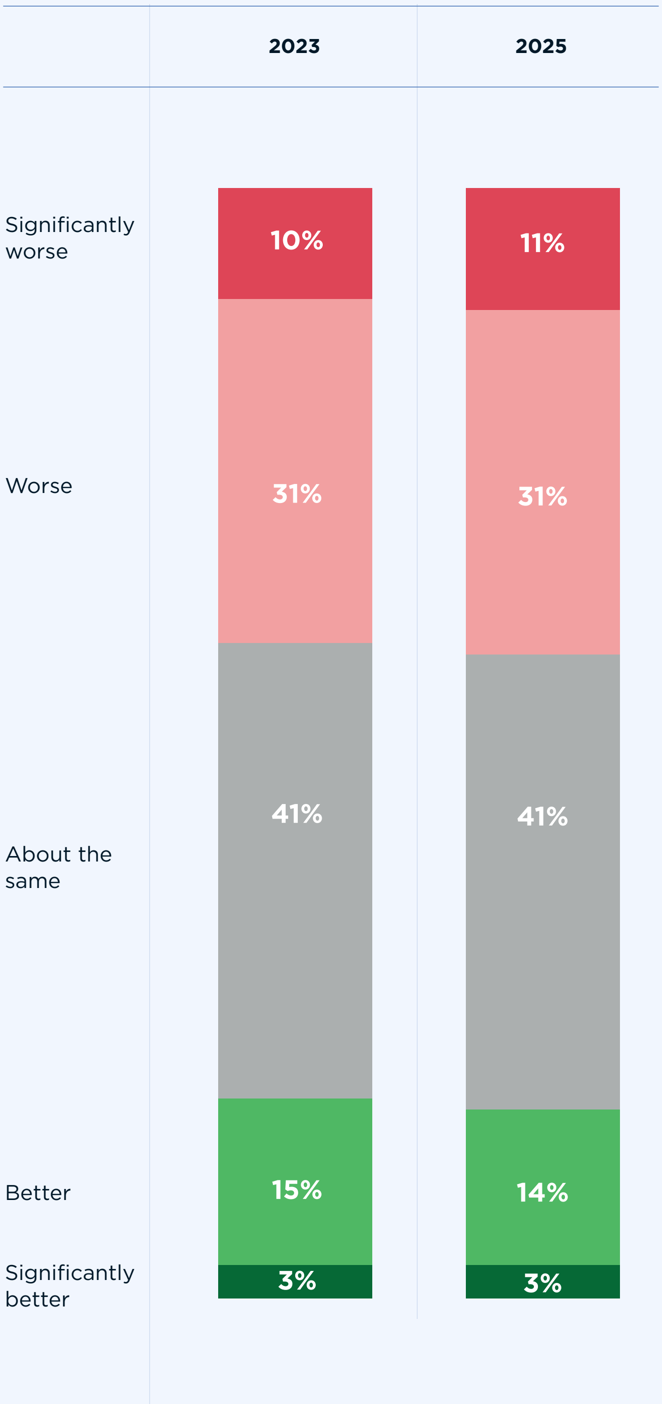
Financial situation

4 in 10 Australians have seen their current financial situation worsen over the last 12 months.

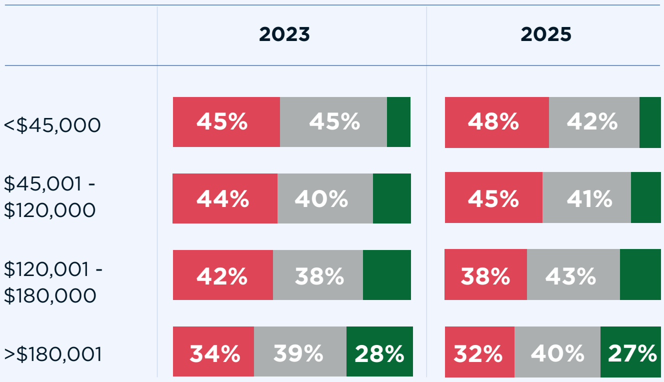
In a time of decreased employment growth, inflation and stagnant wages growth, 42% of consumers said their current financial situation worsened in the last 12 months, including 11% who believe it is 'significantly worse'.

This is particularly the case for those on lower household incomes with rates, and those who rent or own their home with a mortgage, which are both directly or indirectly exposed to rising interest rates.

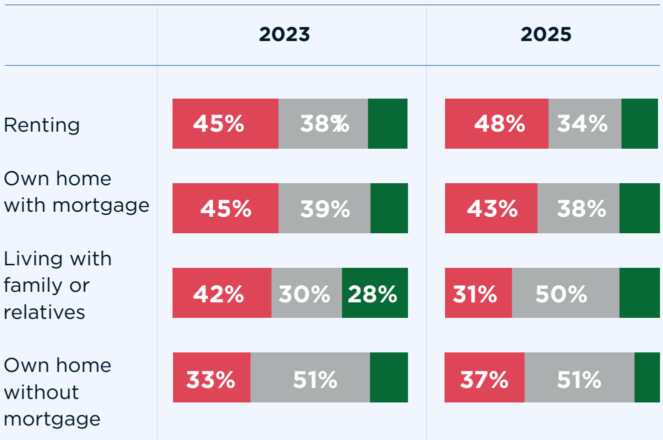
How would you describe your current financial situation compared to 12 months ago?



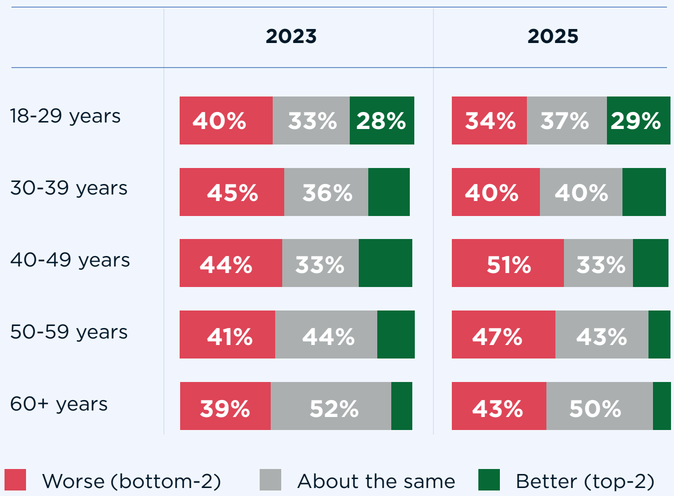
Financial situation change by household income



Financial situation change by living arrangement



Financial situation change by age band



Cost-of-living crisis impacting Australians

Increase in costs of necessities, utilities are the primary drivers for worsening financial situations - outweighing higher interest rate payments.

With four in 10 (41%) Australians experiencing worsening financial situations in the past 12 months, the rising cost of basic needs - daily necessities and utilities - emerged as the most significant drivers of financial pressure.

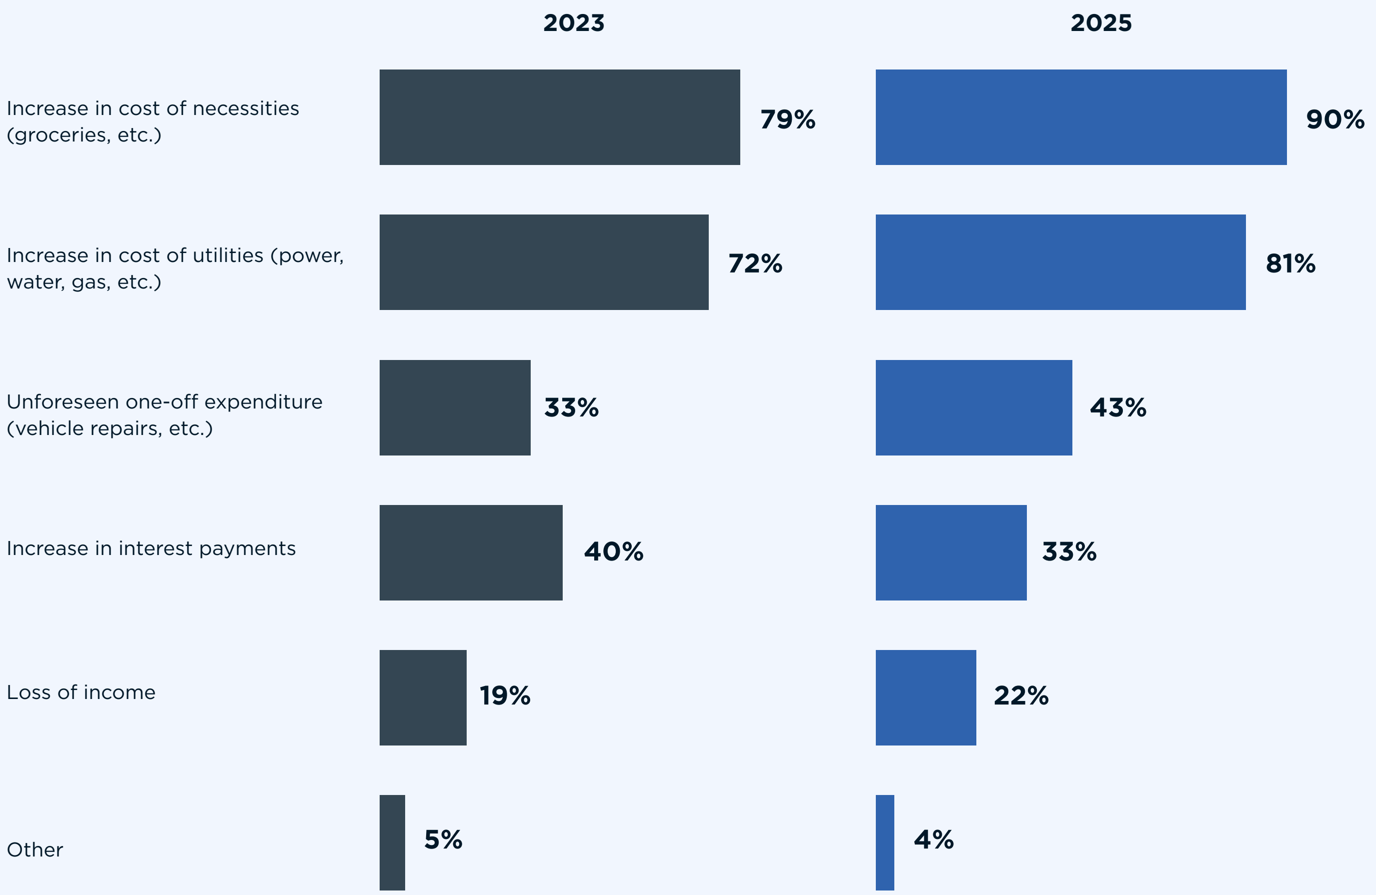
An astounding 9 out of 10 (90%) of mortgage holders attributed their worsening financial situation to an increase in cost of necessities, making it the most commonly cited factor. This was closely followed by rising costs of utilities (81%).

Beyond everyday expenses, 43% reported unforeseen, one-off expenditures as another source of their financial decline.

Although increases in interest payments have affected 1 out of 3 consumers, it ranked behind basic needs and unexpected expenses, indicating cost-of-living expenses outweigh the impact of debt or mortgage rate increases the past year.

Which factors have had the greatest impact on your worsening financial situation?

Those who have experienced a deterioration in their financial situation compared to the previous year.



Mortgage stress

Around 1 in 3 Australian mortgage-holders may be experiencing mortgage stress.

Mortgage stress is a term used to classify mortgage-holders who may be at risk. Borrowers with mortgage repayments that are 30% or greater than household income are considered at risk.

Mortgage holders participating in this study were asked what proportion of household income they spend on their mortgage repayments.

It is important to note that borrowers may choose this proportion based on their relative income level.

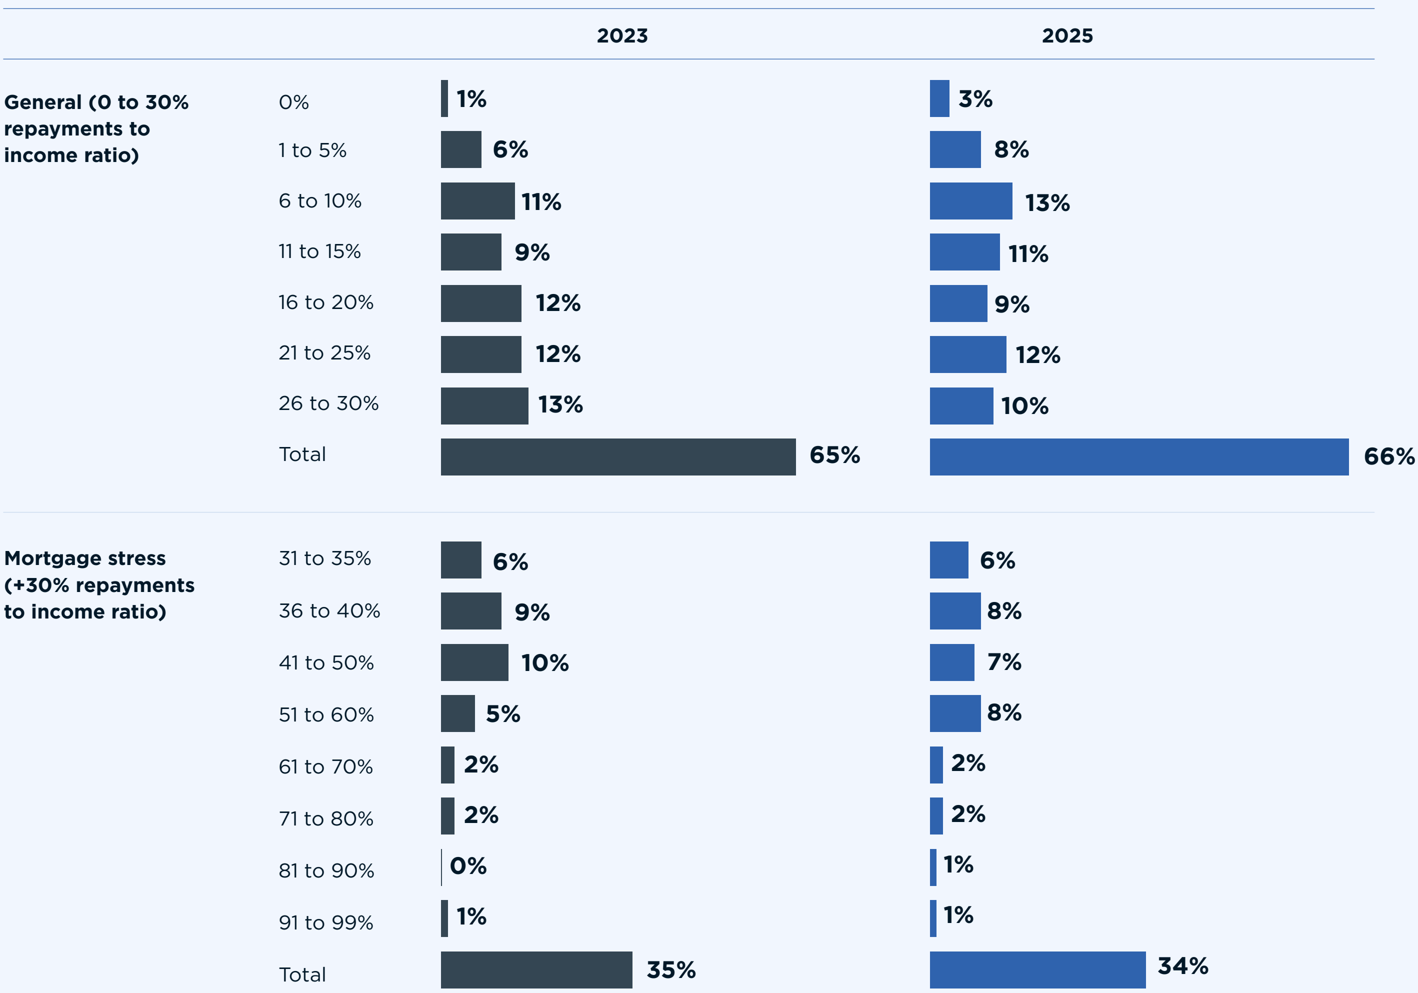
However, amid rising costs, the highest interest rates in a decade, and borrowers rolling off fixed rates, it highlights a challenge many households are facing.

The survey indicates that more than 1 in 3 (34%) Australian mortgage-holders have mortgage repayments greater than 30% and therefore may be experiencing mortgage stress.

These figures echo Roy Morgan's recent analysis, which showed that 29% of mortgage-holders were estimated to be experiencing mortgage stress as at the quarter ending July 2023.

Approximately, what percentage of your household income are you spending on your mortgage repayments?

Those who have taken out a mortgage and with a current mortgage debt.



Fixed-rate cliff

Almost 6 out of 10 Australian mortgage-holders will experience additional pain as fixed rate mortgages end.

With many fixed-rate mortgages expiring throughout 2024 and 2025, many borrowers are moving to higher variable rates, resulting in significantly higher monthly repayments due to rising interest rates.

This survey found that close to six out of 10 (57%) mortgage-holders will have some or all of their mortgages moved from fixed to variable rates in the next 12 months.

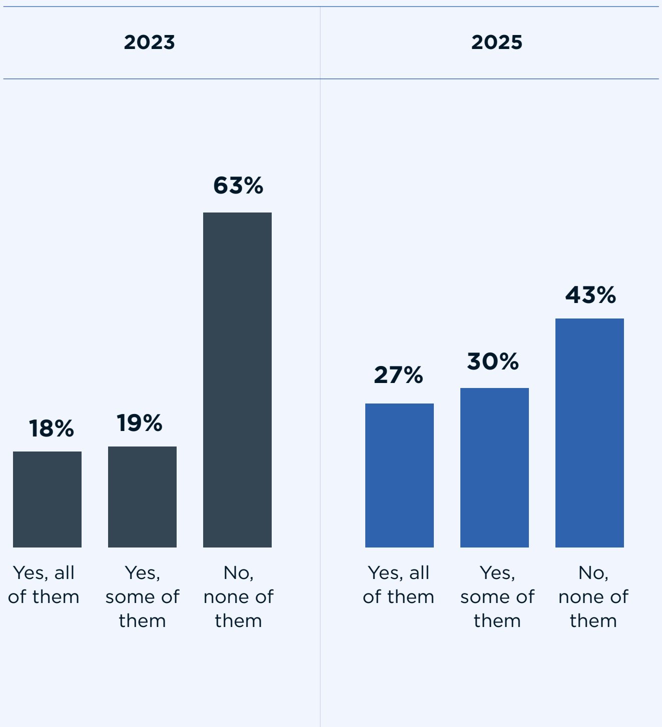
As the cost-of-living expenses strains household budgets for mortgage-holders, it could prompt some borrowers to refinance to a new lender if they are able to meet the servicing criteria.

Consequently, 52% of those already in mortgage stress will have some or all of their mortgage moved to higher variable rates, reinforcing the challenge many households will face over the next 12 months.

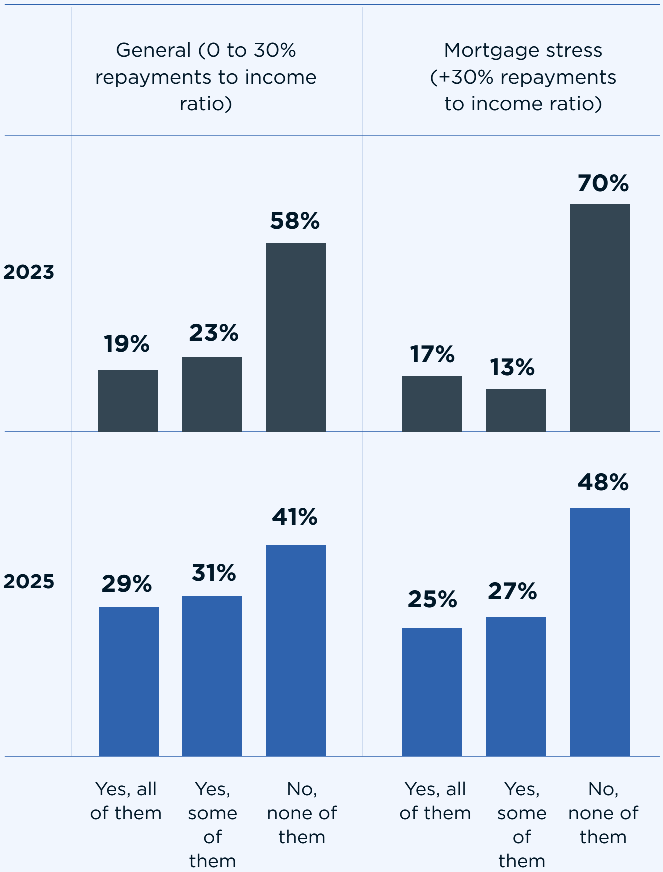
With these pressures and the threat of further interest rate increases, mortgage brokers have the opportunity to position themselves as their clients' trusted adviser by identifying refinancing solutions if their finances and personal circumstances allow it.

Will any of your mortgages be transferring from fixed rate to variable rate mortgages in the next 12 months?

Those who have taken out a mortgage and with a current mortgage debt.



Fixed rate changes by mortgage stress classification



Refinancing

4 in 10 Australian mortgage-holders are actively considering refinancing due to rising interest rates.

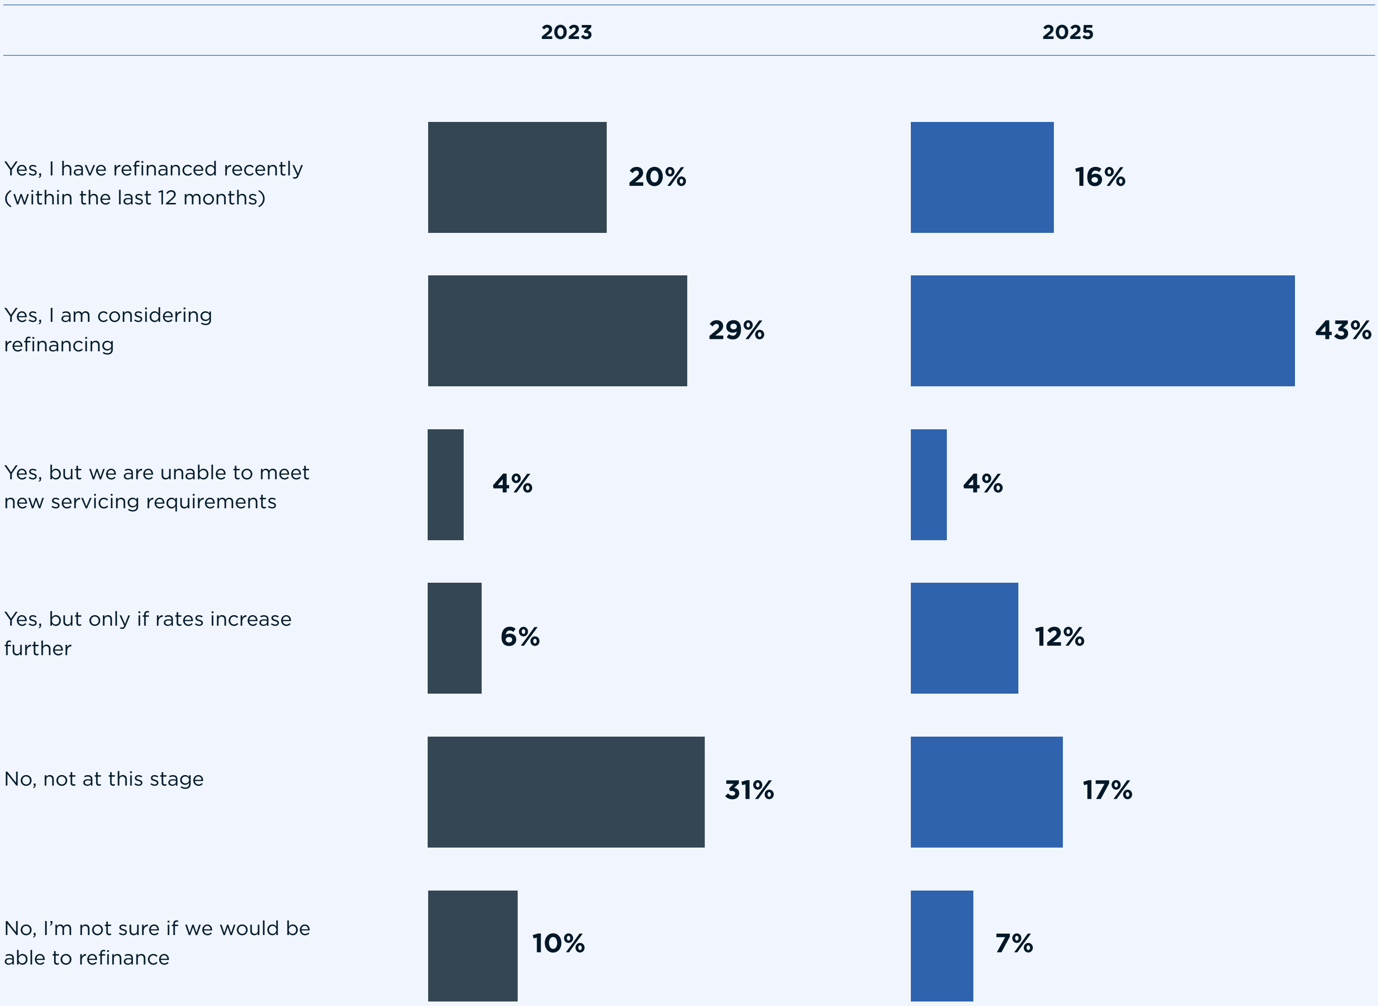
Refinancing is an option for borrowers looking to extract equity or reduce their interest rates by refinancing to a new lender.

This study found that 43% of mortgage-holders are actively considering refinancing, and 16% of those surveyed have already refinanced in the last 12 months.

With such a large proportion of borrowers looking for alternatives, mortgage brokers and lenders may be able to assist clients by directing them towards lenders that could refinance their loans to a mortgage product that is more competitive or better suits their needs.

Have you considered refinancing your mortgage due to rising interest rates?

Those who have taken out a mortgage and with a current mortgage debt.



ABOUT FINANCE BROKERS ASSOCIATION OF AUSTRALASIA (FBAA)

The Finance Brokers Association of Australasia (FBAA) is Australia's foremost national association for finance and mortgage brokers, with a membership exceeding 11,000 finance professionals, most being customer-facing brokers.

These brokers serve as crucial intermediaries, guaranteeing that consumers enjoy the benefits of choice, transparency, and confidence when borrowing.

An association "by brokers for brokers", the FBAA is a passionate advocate for its members, ensuring that legislation best serves to advance both the industry and the interests of consumers through ongoing engagement with industry regulators, federal government departments, state and federal members of parliament, and senior government ministers.

It also provides ongoing professional development to members, training programs via a registered training organisation, and support across areas of business and personal wellbeing. For 30 years the FBAA has led the industry through many challenging times, yet understands that its focus must always be on the future, which is why it continues to innovate, expand and look for new opportunities that ensure the finance broking sector remains current and strong.

ABOUT AGILE MARKET INTELLIGENCE

Agile Market Intelligence is a market research agency focused on delivering meaningful insights and analysis for more informed decision making.

Our expertise lies in combining the voice of our survey participants with robust research methodologies to explore the attitudes and behaviours of consumers, investors, customers, employees, and more.

The annual Consumer Access to Mortgages report is a cornerstone of Agile Market Intelligence's commitment to providing insight to Australia's third-party distribution channel.

Agile Market Intelligence is the driving force behind a number of broker-driven research programs, including Broker Pulse.

Broker Pulse is a community-driven knowledge base of lender performance. The monthly survey tracks mortgage broker experiences with residential mortgage lenders to provide clear and actionable insights into brokers and partners.

For more information about how Agile Market Intelligence can help you navigate Australia's third-party lending channel across the residential, commercial, SME and consumer sectors, please visit our website to set up a free 30-minute consultation.

Visit website >

FBAA

agile.
market intelligence